Editorial Review

From Library Journal

A short story in 55 words! Yet these stories, the world's shortest, have setting, characters, conflict, and resolution. They address murder, love, suspense, horror, betrayal, and often end with a catchy turnaround. The answer lies in the author's ability to write with amazing compression and economy, making each word count. These bite-sized stories, the haiku of short fiction, can be one long sentence or can begin every word with the same letter. As exercises for writers, they can be fun and challenging; as literature they are nibbles. One noteworthy example tells of a man seeking a hit man to kill his wife only to find out she has hired his girlfriend for a similar purpose. These stories demand considerable concentration. A one missed word and the meaning is lost. Making them perhaps more effective in a print format. The performers, all professional actors, read with clarity and feeling, increasing the drama. At the conclusion, directions and encouragement are offered to all would-be writers of this new genre. Recommended with some reservations for public libraries. Nancy R. Ives, SUNY at Geneseo

Review

"The impressive readers throw themselves into the task of performing these little tales and use their considerable vocal talents to evoke the perfect mood for each story."

"All three readers add accents that inject these imaginative bits of wordplay with energy and verve."

About the Author

Steve Moss is editor of the New York Times in San Luis Obispo, California

Frank Muller has earned critical acclaim as a superstar of audio. His narration of Pat Conroy's Beach Music won an Audie Award. His performance of Jack London's brawny, masculine classic The Call of the Wild has gained the attention of listeners and reviewers alike, placing him at the pinnacle of the audiobook industry. Library Journal called him "the first true superstar of spoken audio." On November 5th, 2001, Frank Muller was in a very serious motorcycle accident near Los Angeles, California. Stephen King, John Grisham and other authors held a benefit in New York on February 2nd, 2002.

Suzanne Toren has recorded over nine hundred audiobooks. She has performed on Broadway and in regional theaters in works penned by Shakespeare, Moliere, and Arthur Miller. She has also appeared on Law & Order and in various soap operas. She was awarded the Narrator of the Year Award for her audiobook recordings for the Library of Congress and has earned more than two dozen Earphones Awards from AudioFile magazine.
